

mimizorro / September 23, 2009 02:42AM

Google Baby \(2009\)

clip online

<http://www.imdb.com/video/wab/vi2837643801/>

Among the more unusual films screened in Toronto this year was Israeli documentarian Zippi Brand Frank's Google Baby, which travels across three countries - the US, Israel and India - to unravel the global surrogacy industry.

Sperm is selected in Israel, eggs are developed in labs in the US and wombs are rented in Gujarat, India.

Google Baby focuses on the work of Indian gynaecologist Dr Nayna Patel, whose IVF clinic in Anand provides surrogates who bear babies for foreign couples.

The film raises many ethical and emotional questions without being judgmental.

"Working on Google Baby, I knew I was dealing with the actual application of business rules and commercial dynamics to making babies. Yet the actual real-life examples were on many occasions surprising and hard to digest," says Frank.

(from BBC news)

---